Strikes in China Hit Foreign-Owned Firms

With Inflation Rising at 25% Rate, Worries Over Social Stability Grow

By Steven Brull

DALIAN, China -A series of strikes has hit foreign-owned companies here, raising cuestions about the climate for investment and underscoring the intensity of an inflationary spiral that many see as the biggest threat to Chinese social stability, Japanese businessmen say.

In March, nearly all workers at Mabuchi Motor Dalian Ltd., the city's largest joint-venture, with 6,900 employees, struck for two days before winning higher wages and extended vacations and break time. Japanese businessmen say the strike was one of more than 20 so far this year, with a major plant owned by Japan's Canon Inc. the next possible target.

"Mabuchi's salaries were relatively low, and this was the cause," Dalian's mayor, Bo Xilai, said in an interview.

The mayor, who said he preferred the term "work stoppage" to "strike," added that the city had intervened to resolve the

"We don't agree with strikes," he said,
"We take great concern with the interests of foreign enterprises,"

The mayor's comments reflect intense government sensitivity to a problem that threatens to make the climate for foreign investors less appealing and to accelerate inflation and spreading unrest. Inflation in China has soared to its highest level since 1989, when rising prices helped trigger the pro-democracy demonstrations in Beijing that were crushed in 1989.

The central government, however, has acknowledged that, nationwide, the number of labor disputes taken to arbitration soared 52 percent in 1993 to a record 12,358 cases. The incidents, which include strikes and slowdowns and are most common at inefficient state-run enterpoises, had "influenced social stability," the official Market News newspaper reported Friday.

Fears of growing social unrest have led Beijing to backtrack on its drive to make state-owned enterprises more efficient, a. major plank of the government's program to make a transition to a market economy. But continuing high levels of assistance to main-tain jobs at the enterprises, which produce about half the nation's industrial output and nearly half of which are losing money is feeding inflation, analysts in Beijing said.

In Dalian, a port city in northeast China that is a locus of Japanese investment, with more than 700 Japanese companies, the inflation rate was about 25 percent in 1993, foreign businessmen said. The result has been growing demands for salary increases, especially in foreign-owned companies that often lack the government connections of Chinese-Japanese joint ventures.

The strike at Mabuchi Motors, whose sprawling plant staffed mainly by young women churns out 17 million miniature motors each month for cars, electric shavers, cameras and various gadgets, forced the company to increase workers' basic salaries to 430 yuan ($50) from 300 yuan a month. The salary represents about half of total compensation, with the rest made up of housing food and benefits.

Japanese businessmen said it was appropriate to increase salaries, given the inflation rate, and most companies remained committed to plans to expand investment and production in Dalian, but executives said inflation was degrading the investment climate.

"The sooner one gets here the better," said Takeo Minami, vice president of Dalian Sanyo Refrigeration Co., which makes vansized air conditioners for office buildings and hotels. "It's getting more difficult to find good workers, and prices for land and everything are being pushed up by infla-

Japanese executives also said that ill-defined labor laws were a major cause of the disputes and a source of corruption among government officials.

The general manager of a major Japanese manufacturer here said: "The major problem is that while the basic laws concerning workers have been set, implementation is up to the judgment of regional authorities."

"Our basic policy," he added, "is not to get involved in bribing government officials, but it's possible things like this might have

Black Rule a Reality, Panic Among the Whites

JOHANNESBURG —Anxious whites are besieging South Africa's help lines in a post-election panic, counseling services say.

They say telephones have rung nonstop at crisis help centers around the country, days after the first all-race elections swept a black majority government to power.

Despite repeated assurances by Presidentelect Nelson Mandela, some jittery Europeans are still worried about their future in the new South Africa. They are voicing distress, amid widespread acclaim at bome and abroad for the end of white domination at the southern tip of Africa. Help organizations like Life Line and the Salvation Army say they are inundated with calls from distraught whites, afraid of losing status as a privileged group. Counselors say fears of domination by the 5-to-1 black ma-

On Tuesday, Mr. Mandela will be inaugurated formally as the country's first black head of state before scores of world leaders in Pretoria.

Clinton and Hata Want More Talks

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - President Bill Clinton and Prime Minister Tsutomu Hata of Japan said Monday that they wanted to find a way to revive the U.S. Japan frame work talks on trade soon. A statement released by the White House after the two leaders spoke by telephone said, They expressed the hope that a basis will be found for re-engaging in the framework talks before the G-7 summit in July." The statement said the telephone call lasted about 10 minutes. They had a good conversation about bilateral U.S. Japan relations, resolving the nuclear situation in North Korea and the framework talks," the White House said. The framework talks on trade broke off in February after the previous Japanese government of Prime Minister Monthiro Hosokawa refused to accept American demands for numerical indicators to show whether or not it was opening its markets. The Group of Seven industrial countries hold their annual economic summit talks in Naples in July, and both the United States and Japan will be attending.

Crisis? Sea of Fire? Here? South Korea Shrugs It Off

Even as the nuclear standoff with North Korea approaches its next showdown, people in Seoul are enjoying the warm spring weather and a reinvigorated economy. Many South Koreans say they do not believe that a war will come or that North Korea would ever use an atomic bomb, if it has one. "People talk about it so I guess it's a danger ous situation, but I really don't feel it," said Bang Young Gyu, 24, in Yongsan Family Park

Every few minutes, a military helicopter roared over the park, swooping in for a landing at the U.S. military base just beyond a wall, But Mr. Bang and hundreds of others proceeded with their picnics and dodge ball despite the deafening noise.

In years past, people here say, even a hint of war sent consumers rushing to stock up on dried noodles. But this year, noodle sales did not shoot up even after the "sea of fire" com-ment when North Korean officials walked out of talks with South Korean representatives at Panmunjom, threatening war if Washington and Seoul mounted a pressure campaign.

Young people seem especially oblivious to the situation. Bae Soon Hoon, an electronics executive, said his 16-year-old daughter's high school English teacher had asked the class what the initials NPT stood for. The teacher was shocked when not a single student could identithe nonproliferation treaty, which North Korea is suspected of violating with a nuclear weapons development program.

After being lectured about their ignorance, the students countered by stumping the teacher with some initials more important to them — KFC, for Kentucky Fried Chicken.

A senior official says the government has been trying to avoid alarming the public to prevent panic and the hoarding of food. The government also does not want to scare away foreign investors or visitors as it pushes a campaign for tourism or to dampen celebrations marking the 600th anniversary of Seoul's designation as the nation's capital. So far, South Korea seems to be surviving the scare. Some people have canceled their visits, a government spokesman said, but the impact on the tourism industry has not been devastating. The stock market weakened earlier this year

As the diagnosis has become popular among some psychiatrists and therapists, it has emerged as a wild card in court proceedings and poses several curious legal puzzies: Is a defendant with multiple personalities same or insane

What if one of his personalities meets the state's definition of insanity, but the rest do not?

Big Guns In Zone, UN Says Serbian Defiance Of NATO Alleged

na - The commander of United Nations forces in Gorazde said Monday that he was convinced that Serbian forces, in defiance of a NATO ultimatum, were keeping heavy weapons within a 12-mile exclusion zone around the besieged Muslim enclave.

The UN commander, Lieutenani Colonel David Santa-Olalla of the British Army, said Serbian refusal to allow unarmed UN military observers to patrol in the area, another violation of the NATO order, and the discovery over the weekend of two Serbian hig guns inside the exclusion zone, had led him to con-clude that "there continue to be Serb heavy weapons" within the UN officials also asserted that 100 to 150 Serbian policemen de-ployed inside a smaller 1.9-mile infantry exclusion zone around Gorazde were actually soldiers and therefore violated another aspect of the NATO ultimatum hanning ground troops.

"They are not policemen," said a French Navy commander, Eric Chaperon, a spokesman for the UN Protection Force in Bosnia.

The statements illustrated the sofar unbridgeable gap between the letter of the NATO ultimatum on April 22 threatening air strikes and UN efforts to carry it out.
While UN officials say air strikes remain a possibility, all indications are that they are highly unlikely. In that case, it remains unclear how the United Nations will cajole the Serbs into compliance. Bosnia's mostly Muslim government has refused to restart the peace process until Serbian forces fully observe the terms of the NATO order.

Since the ultimatum was issued, the United Nations has gone to extremes to avoid a clash with the Serbs around Gorazde, abutting an important Serbian supply route into southern Bosnia.

Last week, for example, Yasushi Akashi, the special envoy of Secre-tary General Butros Butros Ghali, struck a deal with the Serbs that, UN military officials said, adverse-ly modified the terms of the Gor-azde ultimatum and an earlier NATO order issued for Sarajevo.

According to the Gorazde ulti-matum, UN troops and humanitarian convoys were supposed to have immediate and unimpeded access to the besieged Muslim pocket. In reality, however. Serbian forces in the Serb-controlled town of Rogatica had been holding up a compa-ny of Colonel Santa-Olalla's men

UN officials explained Mr. Akashi's decision as a "praetical" move. But some critics within the United Nations say his actions hurt UN credibility.

Northern Advance Seems to Bog Down Outside Yemen Port

DJBOUTI - Westerners arriving from Aden on Monday said the city was calm as rival Yemeni armies of the south and north traded volleys of communiques.

Northern troops were reported to be advancing in a crescent from the west and meeting southern resistance on the eastern front.

The pincer offensive seemed bogged down in difficult mountainous terrain east of the besieged port city commanding access to the Red Sea and the Bah al Mandeh Strait at its entrance, according to French naval officers monitoring coded radio communication off the

THE AMERICAS / NO FREE LINCH
After Voters Glare, Congress Pares Its Lifestyle

Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Two years after the furor over overdrafts at the House bank forced lawmakers to give up their freshman senator, Russell D. Feingold, Democrat of Wisconsin, said last week in pressing the Senate to tighten chesp haircuts, free gym privileges and blithe assumptions already strict legislation to restrict gifts to lawmakers. about re-election, Congress is beginning to draw lines -The public is not going to be impressed by "a Senate that some straight, some wiggly —on how far it will go in altering says we cannot trust ourselves," responded the retiring Senator Malcolm Wallop, Republican of Wyoming, "Lawyers have taken over the concept of life in the Senate," he said, "and it is killing the effective creativity of this body." In between Senators Feingold and Wallop are most of the rest of the House and Senate, struggling to find an elusive balance among the conflicting interests of a political era defined by 30-second television attack ads.

What drives most of the votes on these issues is "fear of those 30-second ads," said Senator Christopher J. Dodd, Democrat of Connecticut, who several years ago led the campaign in ban senators from taking fees for speeches but is now opposing the lobbying gift ban.

As it turned out, "60 Minutes" and other television magazine shows were even more compelling when the Senate got down to voting on banning members from participating in corporate-financed charity events. Whenever senators seemed to waver on the issue, colleagues would remind them of how often and vividly they had been featured on the shows, cavorting with lobbyists on the beaches, slopes and greens. Little more had to be said.

In interviews over the past few days, many members indicated that they were getting fed up with Congress-

"The American people are fed up with some of the ways of Washington, and it is time 10 act rather than react," a failing to address the complaints behind it. Some said the unpleasant atmosphere was causing some of Congress's hest members to leave in frustration.

Asked if there is a backlash against the Congress-bashing, Representative William D. Ford, Democrat of Michigan, a congressman since 1965 and chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, said: "There's a backlash with me I've decided to leave this place."

Many, like Senator Carl M. Levin, Democrat of Michigan, sponsor of the lobbying legislation in the Senate, draw a distinction between substantive reform, such as overhaul of campaign finance laws and lobbying rules, and what they describe as lesser issues such as the parking spaces at National and Dulles airports.

"A reasonable case can be made that parking helps us perform our duties," Mr. Levin said. meaning that this helps rush members from late votes on Capitol Hill to an airplane that will take them home to meet with constituents.

"For me, the gifts don't help us perform our duties." he said, "and I don't think it's related to our performance of duties to spend three days at a golf tournament."

Another freshman. Representative Peter G. Torkildsen, Republican of Massachusetts, who has followed through on campaign promises not to use free airport parking spaces, picture-framing privileges or mailing of newsletters, said:
"At large, the public is still concerned that the Congress isn't in the same reality as working America is.'

Legal Fund for Clintons?

WASHINGTON — The White House is studying ways that President Bill Clinton can pay mounting legal fees, including raising money from private contributors, a senior official said Monay.

Bruce Lindsey, a senior presidential advisor, said White House lawyers began discussing a legal defense fund after a former Arkansas state employee filed a sexual harassment suit against Mr. Clinton on Friday. The suit, coupled with the special counsel Robert Fiske's inquiry into Mr. Clinton's Whitewater land dealings, opens President and Hillary Rodham Clinton to massive legal bills. Some legal experts say the bills could easily exceed $1 million.

Mr. Lindsey said the White House had determined that a sitting president could set up a legal defense fund hut that the White House would not be involved in raising the money. He also suggest-ed that the fund would be structured to hide the contributors from the Clintons.

"I'm not sure if legally you have to do that, but clearly that would be an option," he said. "They would not know who was contributing, so there's no way people could give in return for a favor."

Another option under consideration is to negotiate a set legal fee, rather than pay hourly rates. Mr. Lindsev said. "There is simply an attempt to try to outline what the various options are that are available to a president for the payment of his legal fees," Mr.

Lindsey said. He suggested that the review was being done without orders from the president.

Millions for Arms, None for Food, and War-Racked Angolans Are Starving

By John Darnton New York Times Service

HUAMBO, Angola - When the sun goes down. darkness descends and this city disappears into an eerie void. No one stirs on the streets. There are no lights, no sounds, not even the barking of a dog. Darkened hulks of crumbling buildings lie silent under the stars.

Huambo. Angola's second-largest city, is beadquarters of the rebel movement that roams across two-thirds of the countryside. Like Luanda, the coastal capital held by the government, it is a place to measure the havoc and suffering wrought by nearly two decades of civil war in this country in southwestern Africa.

Huambo has no electricity and no running water. It has one shop, but the shelves are practically bare, selling only vegetable oil, sugar, and four types of beer somehow ferried in from Namibia.

In the Central Hospital, looted in the course of an excruciating 55-day siege by the rebels last year, patients lie on steel bed frames awaiting treatment by doctors who have almost no medicine to dispense. A single blanket is so hard to come by that it can cost 1.300 pounds of maize.

starvation within a week.

Life is not much better in Luanda. It is estimated that 2,000 children live on the streets. Many are war orphans. Others come from provincial capitals in the thick of the fighting, tossed into the bolds of cargo planes by desperate parents. Dressed in rags, they spend nights in the sandy strip along the bay and their days begging and foraging for food through mounds of garbage.

Luanda's 2.5 million people also lack electricity. A month ago, the rebels severed a major power line from the Cambambo Dam, and now aging diesel turbines crank out just enough power to feed the central district with rotating blackouts.

Angola's agony is one of the longest-running wars in Africa, and the only remaining serious conflict in south-ern Africa, now that South Africa itself is embarking on multiracial rule. Like other conflicts in Africa - notably the recent massacres in Rwanda — tribalism plays a role

But it is much more complicated than that. The fact Were it not for the almost daity flights of emergency food aid brought in by the UN World Food Program and allows the conflict to continue. The government has Hardship, like suffering, is being equalized as the war ages. Ever since independence from Portugal in November 1975, government forces of the once-Marxist Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola have been locked in a struggle for supremacy with the National Uninn for the Total Independence of Angola, known by its Portuguese acronym, UNITA. The Popular Movement has the crowded coast, and UNITA is strong in the central highlands.

Now, the government of President José Eduardo dos Santos is exhausted, corrupt and ideologically bankrupt. It is meekly subservient to World Bank dictates to try to strike up a pulse in the monhund economy. UNITA is more disciplined but ruthless and in the thrall of its charismatic founder, Jonas Savimbi, now beginning to show his age at 59.

Both sides spend huge sums on arms. No one knows how many weapons UNITA is buying on the illegal market, but its main income, from diamonds mined in the Lunda Norte region, is thought to be over $1 million

The government buys much of its military hardware from Brazil. One report, done for the British-based the International Red Cross, at times reaching a mammoth 900 metric tons a week, 400,000 people would face out diamonds through Zaire.

Access to oil to buy its weapons, and the rebels smuggle out diamonds through Zaire.

Research Institute for the Study of Conflict and Terrorism, said that in its 1993 budget, $475 million went for ism, said that in its 1993 budget, $475 million went for the military, $18.5 million for health and $12 million for education.

> After a peace accord was signed in Portugal in May 1991, hope reigned that after some 30 years of conflict, beginning with the guerrilla bands that attacked the Portuguese colonialists, peace might finally come to one of the continent's richest countries. Angola is steeped in oil, diamonds, minerals and coffee.

> But the hope was short-lived. Before ejections scheduled for September 1992, tensions rose dangerously. The two sides traded accusations and threats. Voter registration was chaotic. UN observers were short-staffed, illprepared, and short of money ($132 million was set aside for the Angola operation compared with $2 billion for Cambodiai.

> Demobilization of the two forces was never accomplished. UNITA scaled down the estimates of its force from 70,000 to 50,000 and let only a small proportion go. The 100,000 government troops and militia, underpaid and demoralized, scattered to the winds. But some were transferred into a paramilitary police unit, which UNgivin Mr. dos Santos a plurality but requiring a second round, it was almost a foregone conclusion that Mr. Savimbi would reject them. His supporters say he is imbued with an almost messianic sense that he is destined to rule the country. Within days, UNITA forces attacked the airport and in turn were being hundred down and killed in Luanda.

With arms caches throughout the country and superior organization, UNITA quickly overran much of the territory. By mid-1993, it held most of the major provinces, forcing government troops into besigned provinces, forcing government troops into besigned provincial capitals and forcing ever more people only the already heavily populated coast. The lighting was more ferocious than ever, and the toll on an exhausted land

At the war's height last year, UN officials estimated that 1,000 people a day were dying from war related causes, mostly famine. In the worst-int area, around the provincial capital of Malanje, where relief workers found children with limbs no thicker than sticks, 250 children perished every day in October, relief officials said No one knows how many people have died since the fighting began 19 years ago, but figures up to 500,000 are commonly cited. The laying of 10 million to 15 million mines has made farming hazardous and created ampptees estimated to total 70,000.

Stiff Sanctions on Haiti

The Clinton administration has finally admitted that its Hairi policy is failing. President Bill Clinton announced on Sunday that America would cease sending Haitian refugees home without a hearing. The administration's most visible symbol, the U.S. special envoy. Lawrence Pezzullo, has been replaced by William Gray, president of the United Negro College Fund and former Democratic whip in the House. Mr. Clinton has refused to rule out the use of force to restore President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. And the UN Security Council has passed a U.S. resolution mandating stiffer sanctions to back up the current embargo on oil and weapons.

The president's increased resolve is welcome. But it would be disturbing if the administration's long and fruitless experiment with weak sanctions led to a premature military adventure in Haiti.

Real sanctions have never been given a chance. The oil embargo has affected only Haiti's poor gasoline has been abundantly available in Port-au-Prince for those who can pay. Visas to the United States have been revoked for the military rulers, but their relatives have still been able to travel freely.

Before even thinking of military adventures, the administration needs to make life very uncomfortable for the Haitian elite. While pressing for stiffer sanctions in the United Nations, it can unilaterally cut off all air traffic between the United States and Haiti, both commercial and private (the resolution approved in the United Nations on Friday mandates a cutoff of noncommercial air traffic only), and eliminate all exemptions that have so far allowed some Haitian industries to continue exporting to America.

The administration can present three stark choices to the Dominican Republic, whose border with Haiti is the bemorrhage point for the oil embargo: Police the border efficiently. accept international help to police the border. or face a complete cutoff of all U.S. aid.

Such a policy should be accompanied by a definite deadline for Haiti's military leaders. Lieutenant General Raoul Cedras and Lieutenant Colonel Joseph Micbel François. to allow Father Aristide to return.

Mr. Clinton's hand may be forced if he is unwilling to take such action. Legislation now before Congress would mandate even more. It would cut off all commerce with Haiti except humanitarian aid, ban all air traffic and forbid the repatriation of refugees against their will. It provides for sanctions against third countries violating these bans. It would require the United States to take a leadership role in the UN Security Council to have the same sanctions adopted by the international community, and calls for a multinational force to police the border with the Dominican Republic.

Some members of Congress bave committed acts of civil disobedience, and the activist Randall Robinson staged a 27-day bunger strike to protest the administration's policy.

The change in refugee policy is heartening. But in the long run, processing Haitians' claims may prove an arduous task and create even more pressure on the administration, In such an atmosphere, with emotions running high and with the White House beset by political problems at home, talk of sending in troops could prove tempting. But the president can best lead now by giving real sanctions a chance to work first.

Mexicans Need Disclosure

Six weeks after the assassination of Luis Donaldo Colosio, Mexico is gripped by endless theories of conspiracy. So far there is no solid evidence to support any of them, or any motive for the shooting. Since Mr. Colosio was the chosen candidate of the dominant Institutional Revolutionary Party, he was a very good bet to become Mexico's next president. The atmosphere in Mexico now is reminiscent of the period in the United States after the murder of President John Kennedy, Clearing up all doubts and questions quickly is impossible, and the country cannot simply dismiss the fears that some insidious plot is attacking the government itself.

The accused gunman, Mario Aburto Martinez, is a 23-year-old factory worker who was seized on the spot. The only strange thing about him is that there seems to be nothing strange no violent history, no unusual political associations, no wild opinions. Along with several police investigations there is a presidential commission at work on the case. But it may discover, as the Warren Commission after the Kennedy assassination, that it is very difficult to prove convincingly a negative verdict that there were no plot and no accomplices.

At first the government asserted that the murderer was a loner. Then, a few days later, its special prosecutor dramatically announced arrested four further suspects. Within a week that claim began to fade as a judge released the most prominent of the four for lack of evidence. But last week in Tijuana, where Mr. Colosio was killed, the police chief was murdered by three gunmen who ambushed his car.

Two days earlier the police chief bad told Tod Robberson of The Washington Post that some of the files on his own investigation of the Colosio assassination were missing. Perhaps there is a political conspiracy after all. Or perhaps the police chief, a reformer, was killed by the drug dealers whom he was pursuing. Or perhaps by men in his own police force wborn be suspected of collaborating with criminals.

A political killing does great damage to even the most stable state. To limit that damage as far as possible, the American experi-ence three decades ago argues powerfully that the Mexican investigative commission ought now follow even the slightest lead as vigorously as it can and promptly publish in detail whatever it finds. Full publication is essential. particularly in view of the closed and archaic nature of the Mexican system of criminal justice. This commission has the crucial job of reassuring Mexicans that nothing is being concealed from the public.

Don't Blame Immigrants

Off and on since the great waves of immigration in the 1840s and 1850s, politicians in America have been tempted to explain whatever happened to be ailing the country at the time by blaming newcomers for causing all kinds of problems for which the native-born could not possibly have responsibility. Nativeborn voters often like to hear that sort of thing, which further encourages some politicians. The issue of immigration is surging again, and the battlegrounds are as varied as the California governor's race and the meeting rooms of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Take first Ways and Means. Last Wednesday the committee rightly voted down an amendment offered by Representative Rick Santorum, Republican of Pennsylvania, to deny Supplemental Security Income benefits to most legal immigrants who are not yet citizens. The amendment was even more important than it sounded because the effect of denying SSI benefits was also to deny Medicaid. This in turn raises the question of who would pay when a poor, legal immigrant walked into an emergency room with a severe illness.

The voice went the right way, but the margin was close, 20 to 16, with Representative Harold Ford, Democrat of Tennessee, abstaining, Three Democrats voted with the Republicans, but the most disturbing vote was Mr. Ford's. A liberal on many issues and the chairman of the welfare subcommittee, be threatened to join the anti-immigrant bloc. He was finally persuaded to abstain instead on the grounds that the issue of benefits to immigrants should be considered in the context of President Bill Clinton's welfare reform plan. Mr. Ford's position is a portent of bow deep the antiimmigrant feeling runs.

In California, meanwhile, Governor Pete Wilson, a Republican, has partially resurrected his once sagging political fortunes with strong attacks on the federal government's failure to stem illegal immigration. Mr. Wilson has gone to court to demand that the feds reimhurse states (such as his) bearing a disproportionate share of the social service and ealth costs of illegal immigration that is the federal government's responsibility.

What Mr. Santorum is trying to do in Washington and what Mr. Wilson is saving in California would seem consistent. Exactly the opposite is the case. As the National Conference of State Legislators and the National Governors' Association pointed out, the effect of Mr. Santorum's amendment would be to increase the burdens on states with large immigrant populations. The amendment, said Raymond Scheppach, executive director of the governors' group, "would shift to states and localities millions of dollars in income assistance and health care costs now borne by the federal government.

There are legitimate issues to be raised about immigration, legal and illegal, and also about abuses of social programs by immigrants and nonimmigrants alike. But wholesale assaults on immigrants are not only wrong, they also lead to had policy.

America and China: The Goal Is Human Welfare

By Robert W. Barnett

dedicated Washington evangelists who want to place "human rights" at the core of the basic purpose of foreign policy there lurks se-cret discomfort about the prospect that Bill Clinton could wield the mostfavored-nation sledgehammer to ad-vance their moral intention in China.

A somewhat less secret discomfort over the sledgehammer possibility is growing in important quarters of Congress. American economists and husiness executives bave been proclaiming something akin to outright borror that the president could even consider making a decision, bowever well intentioned, that would produce universally barmful consequences.
Unless President Clinton is provided with a new way to think and talk convincingly about China be-fore June 3, either he or Congress may feel obliged to take action that would leave scars from which the United States, China and most of the world could not soon recover.

To justify terminating most-fa-vored status for China, the United States would say that it could not allow itself to behave otherwise and still be moral. That "righteous" judgment would have been shaped largely hy the vivid memory of "Tiananmen on June 4, 1989, which remains fixed in the minds of American congressmen, newspaper writers and broadcasters. For many of those who watched the Chinese leadership slaughtering its children, what more was needed to confirm China's brutal propensity to smasb innocent dis-"Tiananmen" became a metaphor for Deng Niaoping's China.

It is this Washington-fashioned mind-set that President Clinton should re-examine. Undertaking the exercise should lead him to remove thoughtlessly inflammatory code words from the vocabulary of the White House and from the private and public vocabularies of those most closely associated with Washington's China policies.

Human rights" comes first. Then "dissidents." To begin subsuming "buman rights" within the broader concept of "buman welfare" need not require any retreat from the president's goal of democratic enlargement. Directing attention to "buman welfare" would, however, bring into American dialogue with the Chinese acknowledgment of their historically unprecethan a billion people. It would also establish the relevance to the dialogue of huge in-creases in individual mobility, choice and productive ontput of the Chinese people resulting from Mr. Deng's guidance of China from Mao Zedong's matrix of social order - egalidented 10-year doubling of wealth and productivity for China's more tarian, disciplinarian, autarkically introspective — toward the high-risk, often messy but widely liberating consequences of market orientation.

Mere change of vocabulary would signify for China American readiness to acknowledge its positive achieve-ments, and in that context to be ready to exchange views not only on "buman rights" but also on the two countries' differing approaches to a shared "buman responsibility" to deal constructively with other social problems such as education, bealth care, homelessness, racial discrimination, drug ahuse, criminal behavior - murder robbery, rape - and needless pollution of the environment.

It may not be easy at first for Washington to understand that certain words really do have different meaning and resonance when beard by Chinese and when used among Westerners.
As to "buman rights," those words have come to produce from Chinese instant apprebension that when Americans use them it will be the intention to demand that China bend to American moral begemony, For Chinese, human rights emerge from the cultural memory, the history and the moral imperatives of a splendid Western civilization. However, when Americans declare that "human rights" possess universal authority, many Chinese resent the implicit denial of space for making their own calculations of virtue and necessity within the framework of China's 2,500 years of highly moralist teaching - Confucian, Taoist, Legalist and, yes, even Maoist. It may come to many Americans as a surprise that "dissidents," in the Chinese vocabulary, is not a synonym for "reformers." China's reformers seek improvement of the system without creating chaos. "Dissidents" would have us believe that the entire system must go. Dissidents are not loyal opposition.

When Americans describe China's treatment of dissidents as crimes which the civilized world cannot tolerate, many Chinese regard it as an intrusive challenge of the very legitimacy of China's government.

Many brilliant Chinese "dissidents" who fled from China after the Tiananmen tragedy began to analyze Mr. Deng's true motivation in allowing the tragedy to occur from the perspective, and with resources, of American universities. Had he betrayed the good of the Chinese people so gravely as to have lost "the Man-date of Heaven"? Or had he bent, under stress, to harsh necessity in resorting to an ugly show of power, so as to sustain structural transformation of all of China, set in motion during the preceding decade?

Many of the most gifted of these children of modern China now recognize Mr. Deng's genius to have been to appreciate China's capability to achieve very rapid economic reform, as a precondition for moving on to-ward eventual political reform. These young analysts hope that Americans can share their admiration for China's far-flung reformers, particularly after perceiving the frightening po-tential inherent in any imitation of the Yeltsin model.

President Clinton's place in history is assured if he can persuade Congress and the American media that there is no compromise of American virtue in replacing a single-minded advocacy of "human rights" with a joint U.S.-Chinese quest to improve prospects for advances in global human welfare.

Specialists on China from diverse disciplines and political backgrounds are nearly unanimous in warning of the consequences of failing to extend most-favored status to China. The husiness community is putting out long lists of the short- and long-term economic costs. Other nations in Asia, the most dynamic region in the world today, are warning Washing-ton not to try to isolate China; they do not want to choose between China

Europe: The Institutional Debate Begins at Last

BRUSSELS — Europe's moment of truth is fast approaching. Will it be capable of making decisions, or not? The European Union likes to present itself as a mature political entity developing along rational lines. Inwardly, its governments are in a ferment of doubt over its future.

The bland sounding issue of "institutional reform" is one that the European governments have been ducking for years, as it will make Europe or break it. Forget the newly ratified Maastricht treaty with its ambitions of still closer European integration and a single European currency to rival the dollar. Forget, too, the genuine achievements of the European single market. Until the collective deon-making question is resolved.

the Union is going nowhere.

The problem that faces the Union is twofold. First, how can it streamline the process of decision-making now that more and more political choices have to be settled in Brussels? Under the present system of qualified majority voting in the Council of Ministers, a measure needs at least 54 votes of the 76 that are allocated to today's 12 member states roughly according to their size. But only a small proportion of decisions are reached by this method. Should it be greatly expanded to cover sensitive areas like Second, how should the majority voting system be adapted to suit the planned arrival in January 1995 of Austria, Sweden, Finland and Nor-way, and perhaps of Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic and Slovakia in 1999? When the Union numbers 16 states, 11 of them will be smaller ones and the arithmetic of majority voting becomes hard to justify. Eight of the smaller countries, representing just 12 percent of the Union's population, could in theory form a blocking minority in the council.

By Giles Merritt This is the first of two articles.

The newcomers are not certain to arrive on schedule, but the die is cast. In that sense, Britain has performed a valuable service. Voting ar-Pushed chiefly by Germany, the rangements are too far-reaching an Union has decided that it can be neither a static organization nor a "rich men's club" made up only of West Europeans. It is to pursue the difficult twin goals of widening, to bring in Scandinavia and the Central European states, and deepening of its political integration so as eventually to be some son of United States of Europe. Seen from outside Brussels, the Union looks fairly coherent, at times even intimidatingly united. The truth is somewhat different. The Council of Ministers is a bottleneck that all too often blocks adoption of useful EUlevel regulations for indefinite periods while governments squabble and bicker. "It's a zoo," was the candid comment of an American journalist speaking at a recent conference here. Strictly speaking, the thorny matter of overhauling the Union's creaky decision-making mechanism is not due to be addressed until 1996, when politicians and officials will look into it in the framework of the planned Intergovernmental Conference. But in fact the debate on decision-making has already started. Last month the British government, with lukewarm support from Spain, opened the Pandora's box by seeking change in the present arrangements for qualified majority voting in the Council of Ministers when and if Austria Swe-

dea. Finland and Norway join. The British challenge to a decision that would reinforce the voting weight of the smaller EU countries was tactically ill-judged and ended in a humiliating climbdown. But it acted as a starting pistol for a Europe-wide debate on the future of EU decisionissue to be left to the Union's more customary process of secretive behindthe-scenes negotiations.

EU governments so far have a lamentable track record on the decision-making issue. The leaders of the Twelve were to bave confronted the problem when they met in Lisbon almost two years ago. But that summit was dominated by the growing backlash against the Maastricht treaty triggered by Denmark's "no" vote its June 1992 referendum.

The Lisbon summit therefore ignored the European Commission's warning that enlargement of the Union to 16 member states could overload decision-making to the point of paralysis. It was decided at Lisbon to press ahead with the enlargement without altering the majority voting system. The 1996 Intergov-ernmental Conference, the summit agreed, would tackle the issue root and hranch, along with such other key questions as the future powers of European Parliament and the role of the European Commission.

The Lisbon decision reflected a reluctance to confront so divisive a problem. As the present system delibcrately overlonks population sizes, the smaller countries have acquired a degree of power that they are unlikely to surrender without a struggle. Belgium's foreign minister, Willy Claes, an articulate spokesman for the smaller member states, has spelled out what he feels their price should be.

"Only a very integrated decisionmaking structure," he warned, would persuade them "to relinquish some of their present advantages." He floated would operate alongside the Commission and have responsibilities in areas like peacekeeping, non-nuclear disarmament and international environmental policy. He also suggested that the European Parliament be given some revenue-raising powers.

In short, the smaller countries are thinking about institutional reform in terms that many will see as alarmingly radical. What Mr. Claes is saying is that smaller countries should be protected from the bigger ones through the creation of a strong supranational EU system of government

An Improved 'Bay of Pigs' Option Could Work for Haiti WASHINGTON — Here is my secret plan to avert a flood of Haitian refugees seeking political asylum, to reassert the credibility of America's power in its sphere of influence, and to bring parliamentary democracy to the Western Hemisphere's most oppressed nation - without the use of U.S. ground troops. Can't be done, you say? Certainly it will not be asylum, hut turning back the majority as economic migrants; and (c) make weiled military threats with no intention of, or support for, carrying them out That last element of the Clinton approach - pretending to flex military muscle - was expressed last week in the most nail-nihhling, pusillanimous "threat" ever uttered by a president of the United States: "We are doing our best to avoid dealing with the military option."

Mr. Clinton's entreaties to the Haitian general and police chief fall on deaf ears because no real military threat exists; expending U.S. lives in save Haiti ranks low in the poll ratings that drive Clinton foreign policy. Needed is a counterforce that does not now exist.

My plan is known as "the Bay of Pigs option." Three decades ago, that place became synonymous with the word "fiasco." The CIA secretly trained a an economie blockade to make civilian Haitians military force of Cuban refugees in Florida and transported them to a Cuban beach to help topple miserable enough to rebel against the army; (b) pick up refugees at sea for interviews aboard U.S. ships, thereby encouraging more to seek political risings never materialized, and the anti-Castro Cuban patriots were killed or captured. Worse than a tragedy, it was an embarrassment.

Just because the intervention spawned in the Eisenhower administration failed dismally then does not mean that the notion of retaking an island by arming a force of its refugees can never work. ashington can learn from past tactical mistakes.

Where the Bay of Pigs was a secret enterprise, run by CIA covert operatives who knew little about military operations, the Haitian Legion should be widely publicized, its training and equipment a challenge to the Defense Department.

Of the nearly 200,000 Haitian refugees already the United States, could not a few thousand able-bodied young men be found to volunteer to fight for their country? I suspect that there are more than that many patriots among them. and that, given the training and equipment, a serious, substantial force could be assembled.

Every American who went from soft draftee to soldier in three months of basic training knows the transformation possible.

Add to that three months for development of natural leaders into noncommissioned officers. with simultaneous indoctrination of democratic procedures, and by year's end offshore Haitians would have a proud, fierce, battle-ready unit better equipped and trained than Haiti's.

Then you put them on U.S. warships, backed up by an aircraft carrier loaded with belicopter gunships, sail into Port-au-Prince --- and see what effect all that has on the band of boodlums on the dock who chased U.S. forces away before.

Even if the Haitian junta shows up with a larger armed force, the sight of oncoming landing craft backed up by an overwhelming show of tactical air power would contribute to a new willingness by the tinhorn generals to restore democracy and hold new, OAS-supervised elections.

The object is to avoid a bloodletting with a credible show of force - and not a Yankee force in front, but a Haitian Legion ready to fight and trained to form a disciplined post-crisis constabulary. This plan will place stress on the Pentagon and is not fooiproof; care must be taken to see that the legionnaires do not become a new junta. But it would instill pride and self-reliance, reverse the refugee flow, and generate popular support.

Who Does She Think She Is? A Chat With Hillary Clinton

By Anna Quindlen

N EW YORK — In a suite at the Waldorf as big as all outdoors, Hillary Rodham Clinton sits on a sofa and talks about Whitewater, commodities trading, her daughter, her friends, why most men favor long hair and whether she should give regular press conferences at the White House.

"I can see people saying, "Who does she think she is, having press confer-ences," said Mrs. Clinton, whose con-ft has been a difficult time in the difficult life of the woman who calls herself "a transitional figure" in America's political mythology. She gave a press conference in which she denied knowing of anything untoward in the transactions that enabled her to turn

$1,000 into nearly $100,000 in the volatile commodities markets.

And she went on "Larry King Live" and faced questioning about allegations by Paula Jones, a former Arkansas state employee, that the president, while governor, had sexually harassed her. Mrs. Clinton, who normally speaks in cogent paragraphs, replied with the negative semigrunt "nh-uh" when asked if the charges upset or bothered ber.

It has been difficult sometimes not to believe that she has modulated her behavior to make her strength unthreatening, that in terms of image she is still vecting between making policy and making cookies: the seated posture and pretty-in-pink sweater at the press con-ference, the trip around the aisles of a

How to Restore Public Confidence in the Necessary Art of Peacekeeping

WASHINGTON — A hacklash W against UN peace operations is being felt in America, ft has gone beyond the ohvious fact that the United Nations was ill-prepared for this post-

Cold War explosion of assignments. The mood has turned ugly as an inexperienced U.S. administration is charged with over-reliance on a United Nations whose "failures" appear more dramatie than its successes.

Gone is the 1992-1993 euphoria over a new, more assertive and, if necessary, more muscular multilateralism. From former Yugoslavia, UN officials slam American leaders as "timid and tenta-tive" while top U.S. officials publicly remind them who pays their salaries. It is not an uplifting spectacle.

If we Americans continue to squander our authority and credibility at this pace, a historic U.S. opportunity—to lead the way loward the next international system -could be lost. And if it is? Well, there is always the law of the jungle.

This is the backdrop for assessing the long-awaited peacekeeping strategy pa-per signed by President Bill Clinton last week. In it the administration declares its continuity with the policies of previous administrations and its sober aim of ensuring "that our use of peacekeeping is selective and more effective." To counter charges that the White House is turning U.S. foreign policy and armed forces over to feckless UN bureaucrats, the report recounts many things that the administration is not proposing: any impairment of U.S. unilateral military options, any form of a standing UN army or earmarking of U.S. units for UN operations, any expansion of "either the out to be nothing but bluff, leading to number of UN peace operations or U.S.

The shift in tone is striking. A few years back, UN peace operations were a growth industry. There are now more than 70,000 blue believes participating in 18 UN peace operations at a cost of more than $3 billion a year. This sudden expansion coincided, it should be noted, with the Bush years. During the 1992 presidential campaign, Bill Clinton seemed to raise the ante, proposing a "UN Rapid Deployment Force" to guard the borders of threatened lands, to protect and feed civilians in civil war and to combat terrorism and By Chester A. Crocker

But up to now, U.S. "policy" toward UN peace operations has been a hap-hazard patchwork of funding sbortfalls and financial threats, basic ignorance of the relationship between peacekeeping mandates and the resources required to carry them out, periodic bouts of UN bashing and n pervasive reluctance to recognize the political effects of U.S. conduct on others who may be engaged in (or targets of) UN peace operations. These unhappy facts lead even America's friends to question U.S. competence m shaping security mechanisms. Critics of the Clinton administration's record are on shaky ground if they point simplistically to continuing humanitarian outrages (as in Rwanda) or unresolved violent conflicts (as in Sudan). They are on safer ground, however, when they cite American military proposals that serve only to feed false hopes on one side and destroy U.S. credibility on the other (Bos-nia). And they are right to protest when delicate and dangerous problems are handied so as to create the impression of disorganization and weakness (North Korea), or when U.S.-led initiatives turn national humiliation and a hasty redefini-tion of mission (Haiti, Somalia).

How would the Clinton strategy paper deal with this disarray? The list of proposals to strengthen UN capabilities is a solid, if hardly visionary; program that could, over time, make a substantial diflerence. Especially important will be steps to strengthen planning, intelligence, logistics and command-control-commu-nications capabilities of the UN Secretariat's Department of Peacekeeping Operations, as well as modest steps to create ones America should participate in mili-tarily. It establishes a checklist of questions to be asked -- relating to whether UN involvement would advance U.S. interests; the occurrence of international aggression, bumanitarian disaster, disruption of "established democracy" or gross buman rights violations; whether the objectives and mission are clearly understood and realistic criteria for ending the operation are in place; whether inaction is "considered anacceptable." If U.S. troops are to become engaged, the list includes the risks to American personnel, whether U.S. participation is essential in success, the presence of acceptable command and control arrangements, the prospects for public and congressional support, and, if major U.S. forces are likely to face combat, whether there is a plan and a commitment to achieve a decisive outcome.

This is a commonsense list that could help to guide policy deliherations in Washington and New York —provided, as the paper states, that decisions will rest on the "cumulative weight of the factors." The last thing we need are mechanical formulas and rules.

None of this package is dramatic; it should not be starring partisan passions. Nor can anyone argue with the proposed reduction in the U.S. assessed share of the peacekeeping hudget from 31.7 to 25 per-cent (America's share of the regular budget) by the end of 1995, while Washing-tool continues to press for "dramatic" administrative and management reforms. And it is good to see the strategy paper endorse the concept of a unified. annual peacekeeping budget for all operations and an enlarged revolving reserve fund ($500 million) funded by vol-

The report deals with the emouve question of command of U.S. forces by restating the president's unbroken chain of the field, while noting that U.S. forces may be placed under the operational control of foreign commanders for specific purposes and that unity of command must be maintained in the field.

The peacekeeping review, however, reads as if the primary problems have been administrative and managerial. In The strategy paper offers criteria for deciding which peace operations to support in the Security Council and which interests does the United States now consider important enough to put its political will behind and commit American forces to? Is the United States capable of guiding the evolution of UN peace operations toward what Mr. Clinton described in December 1991 as "a new national security policy that huilds on freedom's victory in the Cold War?"

It is ironic that Somalia should hover ominously over these deliberations. So-malia has become a grossly inaccurate metaphor for foreign policy debacle, a prime exhibit among the litany of reasons cited for doing nothing serious to check the Bosnian Serbs or other aggressors. Yet a larger bumanitarian tragedy was averted in Somalia, External intervention was what was needed to knock a costly, stalemated clan war off dead center and open up the field for fresh political initiatives to be worked out hy Somalis.

The "failure" in Somalia was not, in fact, a failure of either humanitarian intervention or muscular peacekeeping. it was a failure to apply them steadily and wisely. Much was accomplished suming it is done effectively, has a decisive impact on the local balance. By stopping the factional strife, it freezes in place the military situation, denying the initiative to the stronger and protecting for a time the weaker. But what will replace this new status quo? We must think not only About exit strategies but also about how peace operations will bridge into a political settlement strategy so that something more durable can emerge. In Somalia, the United States "solved" this one hy a quick hand-off to the United Nations, evading the problem of a UN exit strategy under a vastly expanded mandate. The administration's new strategy paper calls for avoiding "open-ended commitment" (as in Cyprus) and for terminating peace operations not effectively linked to "concrete political solutions" (as in the Western Sahara operation). But in some cases, the linkage will have to be to future peacemaking. If America makes pohilical solutions the precondiand, to an only slightly lesser extent, those French "of a certain age" resident tion of military action, it is only repeating its Bosnian disgrace.

> ing mandates and the resources made lable by member states simply must be better understood by Security Council members who approve these missions. There can be no excuse for approving grandiose UN missions (as the Clinton administration did in Somalia) that expose peacekeepers to seto ridicule and discredit, It is irresponsible and dishonest for American commentators to hlast "the UN" for problems arising from ill-conceived of poorly drawn mandates. S EVERAL decades ago. The New York Review of Books ran an essay on Dwight Macdonald, the American social critic, under a headline that read, "He's All Dwight!" After reading Michael Wreszin's engaging new biography, "A Rebel in Defense of Tradition: The Life and Politics of Dwight Macdonald," one is tempted to write as a headline, "He's All

To judge from Wreszin's account Dwight Macdonald (1906-1982) had a remarkable ability to reason himself into faulty conclusions. He even carried with him impressive testimonials to that effect. He liked to boast that no less than Leon Trotsky had said or written to an associate, "Every man has a right to be stupid on occasion but comrade Macdonald abuses it." And after Macdonald had editorialized in defense of Ezra Pound's right to win the Bollingen Prize for More seriously, Wreszin writes that in 1939, after Germany and Russia had invaded Poland, Macdonald declared himself opposed to American intervention in a Enropean war on the grounds that it would bring a fascist totalitarianism to America. He had faith, "religious in its intensity," Wreszin writes, in "a revolutionary uprising

Yet despite such wrong turns and self-contradictions, Dwight Macdonald emerges as a bugely appealing figure in these pages. Wreszin lends sense somehow to every

In this account, Macdonald was ever after torn between being the cultural critic who on the one hand for his second wife, to the point could write marvelously witty attacks on what he saw as the destructively leveling effects of the rad boring? And what about the Revised Standard Version of the Bible and Webster's Third New International Dictionary. On the other hand he could support the insurent students during the Columbia University uprising in 1968 and later solicit contributions to Students for n Democratic Society.

What Wreszin fails to explain satisfactorily is the source of the cial rebellion and cultural elitism.

Kimono Couture: Kyoto Meets Paris

By Suzy Menkes nternational Herald Tribune

ARIS — In the City of Light, it's cherry blossom time. Kimonos flowered in the Bagatelle gardens and even sprouted at the Louvre in a show held under the Louvre Pyrami

The 1.200th birthday of Kyoto - home of Japan's kimono tradition — is the excuse for Franco-Japanese celebrations. At the Bagatelle, exhibits show not only the weaving, dyeing and embroideries of five Kyoto studios, but also how Japonisme infected antique French furnishings, from lacquer cabinets to patterned

The kimono is undisputably a work of art. It takes shape on the body but unlike Western fashion can also bang its beauty on a wall. Wisteria winds across a grainy surface, snow-flakes flutter, bamboos bend above a fishing net and almond blossoms sway against a watery blue sky — all vivid vignettes from a Japanese landscape captured within the T-shape.

The flat robes sprang to life on the runway when the Japanese designer Shinobu Baba showed his modern collection — call it kimono couture - which united East and West. Using fine Italian silk. French embroidery and inspiration from all over, the designer has built a

The kimonos in rich colors from eggplant and deep green though petal pink and lacquer yellow, with geometric and palm-leaf designs, were shown in front of an illustrious audience that included the Japanese ambassador to France, Atsuhiko Yatabe, a kimono-clad Karina Sukarno, daughter of the former Indonesian president, and Princess Yoko Miyura, who was in a Christian Dior ball gown embroidered with

"It's exceptional, it's more than a dream to show here," he said, explaining that he saw his tradition. In 1991, he had a show at New York's Metroplitan Museum, with the kimono designs based on the collection of Japanese screens in the Met's collection. For the Paris show, the theme was inspired by "Egyptomania," a recent exhibition at the Louvre. For Baha, that meant the palm print and patterns inspired by classical gods and animals. In homage to France, there was a kimono with its decorative obi sash woven in Lyon — home of the French silk industry — and an elaborately decorated kimono embroidered by the Parisian house of Lesage. "He is extraordinary - we worked together for 18 months," said François Lesage, who was guest at the Lenôtre dinner. Lesage is also involved in the Bagatelle exhi-

The French embroidery house is currently clinching an arrangement to set up an embroidery school with a Japanese fashion college, as it has already done in Los Angeles.

It is difficult for Western eyes and minds to understand the symbolism of the kimono — and how the modern versions challenge or reinforce the tradition.

The Bagatelle exhibition seems obscure and difficult to grasp, until you study the exhibits from five artists (three under 40) in tandem with the explanatory texts. It then becomes clear that the show is not just a celebration of art and visual fireworks, but of technique.

There is Shibori dyeing, when the effect of waves or peacock feathers is enriched by the knowledge that they are in fact created by tying the fabric into thousands of knots before dyeing it. Or the delicacy of rice-glue application that is used to fix colors to make patterns

Even the cords used to fasten kimonos are works of art, and a large section of the exhibition is devoted to the hand-made ties.

Splendid though it is to see the living work of 1.200-year tradition, it might have been good for the Western audience to see historic kimo-nos alongside. In fact, the exhibition will change on June 9, with the introduction of a display of Noh costumes.

The Bagatelle exhibition will move to Kyoto in October. Pierre Cardin will then present his own interpretation of fashion using the Japanese craft techniques.

Genentech Lives 'High Life' Again Biotech Firm's New Drugs Produce Healthy Profits

By Lawrence M. Fisher

New York Times Service
SOUTH SAN FRANCISCO, California — Biotechnology companies do not use pop songs to hawk their wares as the makers of athletic shoes or sports coupes do. But if they did, Genentech Inc. could well be singing Steve Winwood's 1987 hit, "Back in the High Life Again."

As it happens, 1987 was the low point for Genentech, the world's first biotech company. That was the year an advisory panel to the U.S. Food and Drug Administration recommended against approval of the compa-ny's flagship drug, Activase, used to dissolve blood clots in heart-

Though Activase was ultimately approved in 1988, Genentech was unable to show that its $2,200-adose drug was any more effective than a competing drug selling at one-tenth the price, and sales failed to meet early expectations. The result: Roche Holdings Ltd. the hig Swissd drug maker, ac-quired majority ownership of the weakened Genentech in 1990.

Roche, which currently owns 60 percent of Genentech's equity, retained an option to acquire the remaining 40 percent at $60 s share, effectively putting a cap ou the stock price. Meanwhile,

Dollar Eroded By Skidding U.S. Securities

NEW YORK — Tumbling U.S. Treasury bond and stock prices Monday eroded investor confidence in owning dollar-denominated assets and sent the U.S. currency lower against European currencies.

The Federal Reserve Board's failure to raise U.S. interest rates was the demise of the dollar and the bond market, traders said. "It's hard to get excited about the dollar when the stocks and bonds are getting whacked," said Steve Geovanis, managing director of foreign exchange at Merrill Lynch. "The dollar is vulnerable."

The dollar finished in New York st 1.6540 Deutsche marks, down from 1.6625 Friday, and at 5.6720 French francs, down from 5.7003. The dollar also slipped to 1.4105 Swiss francs from 1.4140 Friday. The pound strengthened to $1.698 from $1.4930. The flight from dollar-denominated assets was spurred by a plunge in Treasury bond prices. Investors bailed out of Treasuries amid fears that inflation, which erodes the value of fixed-income securities, would accompany robust U.S. economic growth. While the Fed already has raised interest rates three times this year as a preemptive strike against inflation. many investors had speculated the U.S. central bank might push rates up again this week.

But on Monday, the Fed temporarily added reserves to the banking ing an intercontinental alliance this week by signing a strategic agreement with Continental Airlines in the United States. system at a time when federal funds, the rate on overnight loans among U.S. banks, were trading above the perceived target of 3.75 percent. ASHINGTON—Half a century later, the dream of the architects of the postwar international economic order is almost coming true. Next year, touch wood, a new World Trade Organization will take its place alongside the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank as the third leg of the grand triad of multilateral institutions first envisioned at the Bretton Woods conference

With the collapse of Communism, the inwith the conapse of Communism, the in-stitutions are becoming genuinely worldwide bodies, as the architects originally intended. But as the triad's third leg is put into place, the other two are showing signs of age. They will not last the next half century in their correct form.

With the anniversary fast approaching the Bank and the Fund are coming under close scrutiny as the international financial community prepares its verdict on their first 50 years. The most common criticisms of the Bank are that it has become bloated and lost its focus; that it has tried to take on too much and neglected the environment.

The Fund is widely acknowledged to be lean and mean — perhaps too mean. Developing countries have long accused the Fund of setting excessively harsh conditions for its loans and lacking political sensitivity. Now these charges have burst forth with renewed vigor over the Fund's handling of Russia.

Some of the criticisms are petty; some are being fixed (the Bank is gradually paying more attention to the environment); some need more fixing (the Bank is still too bloated); and some are just plain wrong.

The record shows indisputably, for instance, that countries meeting the Fund's conditions have usually prospered, while those rejecting them have not —and the same will undoubtedly hold true for Russia too. But the main challenge for the next 50 years will be for the institutions to adapt to s

Over the past half century, the world has moved from fixed to floating exchange rates

The World Bank and IMF are showing signs of age and will not last in their current form.

and the industrial countries have long stopped seeking loans from the Fund, prefer-ting the private capital markets. The emphasis of development philosophy has shifted from government aid to private investment. Now, formerly developing countries, especially in Asia, are fast graduating into the industrial league, and most ex-Communist countries have embraced market economics. countries have embraced market economics.

The balance of world economic power is inexorably shifting away from the Western countries that dominated the postwar era.

These developments have the long-term effect of weakening the Bretton Woods institutions. The IMF no longer fulfils its original mission of stabilizing exchange rates and its clients are now much the same as those of the World Bank: low- and middle-income countries. Both institutions are going to see their client hase shrink as more and more countries develop and the ex-Communist countries become properly functioning market economies.

With fewer sectors now considered suitable for public development aid, the institutions' areas of operations will diminish - just as their activities increasingly overlap.

So why not a merger? There would obviously be some advantages: duplicated activities, such as analysis, research, some programs and technical assistance, could be rationalized. Costs could be reduced and a merged institution might make money selling off some prime Washington

But much of that could be done without a merger. Far more important is to get the institutions' missions right.

There is still probably a useful role for a good cop (the Bank) and a bad cop (the Fund) in prodding many of the world's countries in the right direction. But the arguments for a merger can only grow stronger in the years ahead if the Fund, in particular, fails to reinvent its role.

In an ideal world, the Fund might try to recapture its original function of bringing more order to exchange rates. It might enforce stronger surveillance of national economic policies and try to keep tabs on surplus as well as deficit countries. That is unlikely to happen any time soon.

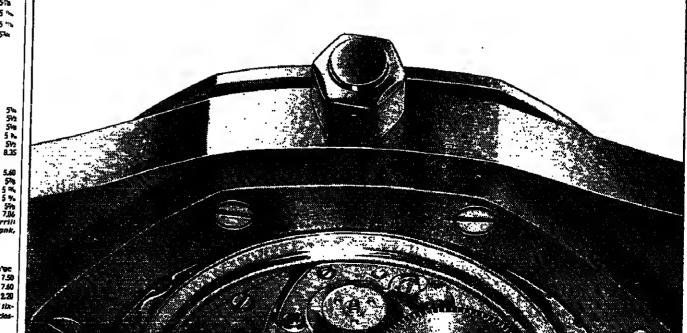

Meanwhile, a more profitable approach would be to use the triad's three legs to support new forms of intergovernmental co-operation, perhaps in an expanded or re-vamped Group of Seven, that better reflect the world's changing balance of economic power. Maybe the world's best brains could go back to Bretton Woods and redesign the architecture for the next 50 years.

Poland's LOT Plans Deal With American Air

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches WARSAW -- The Polish national airline LOT will sign an initial partnership agreement with American Airlines, a unit of AMR Corp. after a search that lasted more than a year for a strategic partner, sources close to the negotiations said on Monday.

LOT executives refused to comment before a news conference that is scheduled for Tuesday.

Another U.S. carrier, Delta Air Lines, and a number of airlines from other countries had also been competing for the partnership. The partnership will include sharing communications, a reserva-tions network and technical support. It is intended to promote efficiency and the competitiveness of the airlines but involves no financial dependence, a LOT source said, requesting anonymity.

LOT's cooperation with a U.S. carrier is also expected to improve connections with the large Polish community in the United States.

LOT is also starting to cooperate this year with Air New Zealand, leasing planes this year for the sum-

In 1988, LOT was the first East European airline to purchase Western commercial aircraft after four decades of operating Soviet-built planes that have relatively low fuelefficiency ratios.

LOT's first Boeing 767 went into operation in March 1989 and most of the Soviet-built Hyushins and Tupolevs have been withdrawn since then.

The state-owned airline flies 1.2 million passengers annually to 53 destinations around the world. American Airlines carries 84.5 million passengers a year and serves 201 cities. In March, LOT emerged victorious from a conflict over a dispute about trans-Atlantic routes with British Airways that idled traffic between Warsaw and London for four months. (AP, Reuers) KLM 'Open' for Accord

BONN — Dentsche Bank AG's extensive involvement in the collapse of Jürgen Schneider's real estate empire has tarnished the bank's reputation with the German public, but not with stock analysts, for whom Germany's biggest commercial bank remains a solid favorite.

Doutsche Bank still rates either an outright "buy" recommendation or a strong "hold" from most analysts. Its size, myriad industrial holdings and financial market clout at home and abroad, analysts say, are simply far greater than those of its two closest competitors, Dresdner Bank AG and Commerzbank AG.

Deutsche Bank, based in Frankfurt, also is coming off a stellar year of earnings that has bolstered its predominance in German bank-ing. In 1993, its profits rose by 15.7 percent, despite a huge rise in provisions for bad debts.

Its group operating profit, after risk provisions, rose to 5.30 billion Deutsche marks ($3 billion) from 4.55 billion DM, while risk provisions seared by 72 percent, to 3.3 billion DM. The bank has assets of about 560 billion DM. Like most German banks, Deutsche Bank prospered during Germany's recession because of the country's booming financial markets and declining interest rates. It also gained from trading on its own account in financial markets, with net own-account trading income rising to 200 billion DM from 1.13 billion DM the previous year.

"In terms of quality of its trading operations, meaning the skill, flexibility and innovative power of the traders, I personally pre-fer Dresdner Bank," said Michael Wand, banking analyst with BHF Bank in Frankfurt, "But in terms of volume, no other German bank even comes close to Deutsche."

He recommended buying shares.

Hilmar Kopper, the managing board chairman of Deutsche Bank, said that Mr. Schneider and his wife, Claudia Schneider-Granzow, had absconded with about $130 million owed to construction companies and craftsmen, adding that it was impossible to say bow much of Deutsche Bank's exposure

"It could be several bundred million marks," he said last week, dismissing that amount as "peanuts."

The description was apt but the choice of words enraged the German tabloid newspapers and much of the public. Mr. Kopper's gaff typified the kind of year Deutsche Bank has had on the corporate and public relations fronts.

In January, Metallgesellschaft AG, Germany's 14th-largest company, nearly failed because of losses of about $1.33 billion from oil futures trading in New York. It was bailed out at the last minute by a consortium of its creditor banks.

Deutsche Bank holds 12.6 percent of the company's shares, and Ronaldo Schmitz, a member of the bank's managing board, is the managing board chairman of Metallgeseils-

Although more than 100 creditor banks had financed both Schneider and Metallgesellschaft, Deutsche Bank has taken the brunt of the criticism, in part because it has such vast equity stakes in a plethora of Germany's leading businesses and industries. The bank, for instance, has a 24.40 percent stake in Daimler-Benz AG, the country's largest industrial company, and stakes of 10 percent or more in 22 other big concerns. That may irk critics but it can also be a tremendous boon to the bank's earnings.

"Most of those companies are forecasting substantially higher earnings this year," Mr. Thees said. "That will benefit Deutsche and also acts as a powerful draw for foreign investors, who see the bank as representing a broad cross-section of German industry."

Olaf W. Conrad, banking analyst with Trinkhaus Capital Management in Duessel-dorf, rates Deutsche slightly lower, calling it a

Poland Unveils Plan to Reduce Debt

would have to be written off.

WARSAW -- Poland will introduce a broad program of debt-forequity swaps to cut its internal and external debt, speed up privatization and boost foreign investment, Finance Minister Grzegorz Kolodko said Monday.

"By the end of the year, the government will present a plan of debtfor-equity swaps which will combine debt reduction with privatization and new invest-ments," Mr. Kolodko said.

"I want to use techniques." he added, "of exchanging debt for equity on a large scale both internally and internationally."

Mr. Kolodko, an economics professor who filled the long-vacant posts of finance minister and deputy prime minister in charge of the plan should speed privatization and boost foreign investment.

Poland has recently won a final stage of a 50 percent reduction of its $34 billion official debt and reached an agreement with its commercial creditors on reduction of its $13 billion commercial debt.

But Mr. Kolodko said the remaining foreign debt and ballooning internal public debt, currently at about 340 trillion zlotys ($15 billion), remained a heavy burden threatening Poland's recovery.

He said Poland needed to boost investment and budget revenue to be able to serve its debt efficiently.

The Polish economy grew by an estimated 4 percent last year. Mr. Kolodko said it was set to expand by a further 4.5 to 5 percent this

AGF Spurns Crédit Lyonnais Alliance

PARIS — Assurances Générales de France. France's second-largest state-owned insurer, backed away on Monday from a proposal by the state-owned bank Credit Lyonnais for a farreaching banking and insurance alliance. It plans instead to pursue a less ambitious cooperative venture with Societé Générale.

The move is a sign that the fashionable onestop shopping concept of the mid-1980s — that banks could sell insurance products and insurers of fer banking services - has failed to make the beadway its French supporters expected. AGF said Monday it had turned down an offer by Credit Lyonnais to form an insurance-banking alliance along the lines of one between Union des Assurances de Paris and Banque

Nationale de Paris. AGF said it ruled out Crédit Lyonnais's proposal because the state-owned bank already sells non-life insurance. "We can't form an alliance with another network which offers non-life insurance," an executive said, adding that such an agreement would amount to AGF

one. "It really amounts to an expression of preference," the executive said.

Société Générale, which was sold to the private sector in the 1987 wave of state asset sales, said it wanted to increase its 1.64 percent stake in AGF when the insurance company is privatized later this year. Industry sources said they expected the bank to take a stake between 5 percent and 10 percent.

Michel Thibout, a Société Générale spokesman, said the idea of an alliance between the two parties was "no secret."

Marc Vienot, the chairman of Societé Gener-ale, said in September that AGF was one of the state companies in which he wanted to invest. Mr. Thibout, while refusing to say outright what size stake Societé Générale was looking to acquire, said the bank had taken a 5 percent stake in Rhône-Poulenc SA, another recently sold state company. He added that "as a general rule, if you look through SocGen's portfolio, the stakes are always around 5 percent."

Mr. Vienot said then that AGF was the AGF said it had no formal agreement with Societe Générale and was in no hurry to create run." AGF has between 2 percent and 3 percent of Société Générale's capital.

French press reports have said another reason for AGF's reluctance to join forces with Credit Lyounais could have been the size of the stateowned bank's losses and bad-loan writeoffs, which could have tarnished AGF's image.

Crédit Lyonnais posted a loss of 6.9 billion French francs ($1 billion) last year and has placed 43 billion francs in bad real estate loans into a separate company, taking them off its

'Made in China' Spells Trouble For Vietnamese

Agence France-Presse
DONG DANG, Victnam — At dawn each day, a thin convoy of bicycles and motorbikes leaves this border town. With it trickles away a degree of hope for Vietnam's faltering state industries. Precariously balancing everything from beer to televisions, traders make the trek down from border posts such as Dong Dang that dot the China frontier. Their destination is the market town of Lang Son, where wholesalers snap up their cargo of cheap Chinese-made consumer goods for resale across Vietnam. Hundreds of millions of dollars of goods flood across the frontier each year, mostly brought in illegally by small traders growing rich as China dumps its surplus production on Vietnam, which has found itself powerless to stop the trade. With the Chinese stockpiles timated to be worth as much as $34 billion, the trade threatens to swamp Vietnam's light industries, which are struggling from debts and from decades of centralized mismanagement.

"The Chinese are dumping goods from their vast stocks," said a Western economist who insisted on anonymity. "And with the devaluation of the yuan. the products are even cheaper." "What the Vietnamese get from China is basically a better product, and the Chinese are definitely not selling at cost," Vietnam's textile industry has been particularly hard hit with high-quality Chinese cloth selling for around 15 percent less than domestic material Chinese products such as porcelain, cooking utensils and bicycles almost completely dominate the Victnamese market. Trade agreements between Vietnam and China appear ineffective, moreover, as profiteers ignore government diktats in the interests of enriching themselves.

However, new domestic regulations in China can have a rap-id impact in Vietnam: After Beijing banned TV satellite dishes, traders began selling Chinese models in Vietnam at half-price, as manufacturers rushed to clear factories.

Some officials and economists in Vietnam have suggested that the competition from China is just the bitter medicine Vietnam needs to sort out its crumbling state sector.

"It's extremely difficult for the Vietnamese to compete," said the economist. "They just have to adjust to the fact that it's an open market and forget about producing the same goods."

Prospects for Vietnam boost-ing its exports to China appear hleak, say analysts. The Vietnamese currency is overvalued, add some, and few Chinese consumers appear interested in Vietnamese products, "Chinese people don't want to buy Vietnamese products," said Chen Rufang a trading-compa-oy representative in the the Guangzi province. "Their quali-

GE decided to increase its pres-ence in China "without hesitation," despite uncertainty over the future of China's most-lavored-nation trading status with the United States, Mr. Gannon said. "We have confidence in this country and even without MFN there will be significant trade flow between GE and China," he said. "We expect GE's annual sales in China to reach more than $2 billion by 1996 or 1997, up from $1.1 billion last year."

The proposed new enterprises, both wholly owned and joint ventures, are to be operational by 1996. The industries involved include lighting, plastics, locomotives, hy-dropower, gas and steam turbine generators, appliances and financial services, the China Daily said.

■ China Denies Venture

China denied Monday that an American company would be building the country's second national telecommunications network, Agence France-Presse reported from Beijing. Nynex Telecom Network System

Inc., a unit of Nynex Corp., said recently that it had signed an agreement with China that could evolve into a joint venture to build the second national network."

Very briefly:

Post Publishing Public Co., which publishes the Siam Post and the English-language Bangkok Post, withdrew from a consortium bidding for a new television station, saying it did nor make economic sense, Its partners and three rival consortiums remain in competition for the first station in the country not controlled by the government or military.

• China's electricity production fell far short of demand in the first quarter of 1994, despite a 10 percent increase in output over the same period last year, the Power Industry Ministry said. Output topped 210 billion kilowatt hours in the January-March period.

 Australis Media Ltd., an Australian pay-television company, formed a movie venture with Tele-Communications Inc., and will form a sports channel with Liberty Media Corp. The U.S. companies plan to merge. • Samsung Co. is expected to face opposition from the South Korean government over its plan to enter the automobile industry via a partner-ship with Nissan Motor Co., according to press reports. • Daimler-Benz AG plans to use its listing in Singapore on Tuesday to create a shareholder base in Asia. Daimler also plans to seek a listing in-

preneurial culture, which attracts research scientists because of the freedom they are offered and which attributed to the company's shift in rewards every employee with stock

Amid the continuing consolidation in the drug industry, however, Roche's $5.3 billion acquisition last week of Syntex Corp., based just 25 miles south of Genentech's headquarters, raised new speculation about Generatech's future. Syntex, best known for birth-leading arthritis pain reliever, has had a very different technology foter the criteria being measured, to

Mr. Raab so considerable overlap in research efwhether the drug did indeed reduce some market with Roche itself. Analysts say Roche could seek to reduce costs by consolidating.

Roche is not talking about any such plans, but its acquisition of Syntex, which has been struggling for lack of strong new products, points to another challenge facing

Syntex, an innovator in the 1960s and 1970s, failed to embrace the emerging science of biotechnology and fell behind. Some analysts say that Genentech, while clearly the industry leader in developing drugs from protein molecules, has been slow to invest in second- and thirdgeneration biotech developments, like antisense and gene therapy, two approaches that treat disease at the genetic level. "Generatech has not done nearly, as many deals as it could have or should have," said Viren Mehta, an analyst with Mehta & Isaly, an investment firm based in New York that specializes in health-care tech-

Genentech is in a strong position to enter joint ventures with new companies in emerging fields, he said, but has done relatively few compared with a competitor such as Chiron Corp.

G. Kirk Raab, Genentech's president, said Genentech gets the deals it wants and has passed up several when the terms were not favorable. But while the company has internal and collaborative ventures in the np-and-coming technologies of drug discovery, he said it intends to focus for many years on what it knows best: duplicating naturally occurring proteins of therapeutic value. Such drugs will drive Genentech well into the next century, be Genentech's recent trek back to the bright lights was built around by the FDA such drugs. The rebound began with the April 1993 publication of the results of a $55 million, 41,000patient study, known as the Gusto trial, which demonstrated that more lives were saved with the Activase blood-clot dissolver than with Streptokinase, the less-expensive alternative.

Activase sales, which had been in decline, have since surged. Then, in December, Genentech received FDA approval for Pulmozyme, the first drug treatment for cystic fi-bross, a life-threatening genetic disease characterized by thick mucous secretions in the hungs. In March, it received approval for Nutropin, a new form of human growth hormone. Generatech's founding scientist, Herbert Boyer, pioneered the process of using recombinant DNA to produce therapeutic proteins, and the company's prowess in the field has never been in doubt. What is new, analysis say, is a corresponding excellence in navi-gating the political and regulatory shoals that lay between drug development and product approvals. Pulmozyme went from conception to market approval in just years, about half the industry aver- clot dissolvers, he said. What they age, and sailed through the FDA's did with Activase, pre-Gusto, to review process in just nine months. hold it where it was, was remark-that; we listened to their concerns." Part way through the human control pills and for Naprosyn, the clinical trials of Pulmozyme, the FDA requested that Genentech al- both play the hero and increase forts between the two, as well as the hing infections that ultimately kill most cystic fibrosis patients.

> number of patients in the final trial be increased to nearly 1,000, to add to the statistical validity of what would be the first major trial of a cystic fibrosis drug.
> For Generatech, the shift meant rapidly scaling up production, and the company started a $37 million

The agency also asked that the expansion of its manufacturing op-erations even before beginning the The FDA liked what it saw. "It was a large trial; it had clinical endpoints of statistical power; and it was able to demonstrate unequiv-ocally that the drug worked," said David A. Kessler, the agency's Genentech began shipping Pul-mozyme commercially just two weeks after approval, and the drug had sales for the first quarter of 1994 of $22.4 million. The company recently completed intermediate trials of Pulmozyme for the treatment of chronic bronchitis, a disease commonly suffered by longterm smokers, which affects far more people than does cystic fibro-

Data from the trial showed sig-nificantly reduced deaths among severe chronic bronchitis patients receiving the drug, compared with those getting a placebo. While plowing new ground with

Pulmozyme, Genentech was also making a defensive move with Nutropin, which was approved for the treatment of short stature in March. Protropin, Genentech's original genetically ngineered growth hormone, had 1993 sales of $216.8 million, up 5 percent from 1992, but the drug will soon face competition from three generic products currently being reviewed

By introducing Nutropin first, Generatech got a jump on the competition. They are now in the best possible position to defend Protropin," said Kevin Wilson, an analyst with S.G. Warburg & Co. The quality of their marketing has not been recognized" for its role in capturing the market for growth hormone or, for that matter, for blood-

Actually, Genentech's aggressive marketing of Activase was of some company used to be very combative with the FDA," said M. David as was the spending of $55 million MacFarlane, Genentech's vice to show that the drug was marginpresident for regulatory affairs, ally more effective than its much less-expensive competitor.

Indeed, some scientists and other biotech executives suggested that Genentech should lower Activase's price significantly after the Gusto trial, on the theory that it could Mr. Raab said the company did market research and forme that price cuts would have dire effects on profitability without significantly increasing sales. From a "public-relations standpoint, the point where it would have made a difference was $500, cutting the price to $1,700" for the single dose given shortly after a heart attack, Mr. Raab said. "That would have cost us $50 million, which is about the total profit Genentech made last year. And we could not find a doctor who said he would use it at $1,700 but would not at $2,200."

Manufacturing genetically enginecred proteins is more costly than producing traditional drugs, but the real driver behind the high prices is the phenomenal cost of research and development. Genentech's R&D expenses for 1993 were $299 million, up from $279 million-The single most important rea-son to do the Roche deal was the alternative: to devastate this organization in research and development," Mr. Raah said.

In fact, several younger biotech companies have since agreed to partial acquisitions by large drug manufacturers as an alternative to toughing out the public-equity

Still, grateful to Roche as Mr. Raab is, be would prefer Genen-tech to remain a separate entity.

"I have told them we do not want them to buy the rest of the company, but it's completely their deci-sion," Mr. Raab said of Roche's top management. "If they dn buy the rest of us," he added hopefully," I think that will be fine, because I think they'll leave us alone, as they have so far."

Revived Finley And Angels Rout Faltering A's

The Associated Press At first, Chuck Finley looked like he might be in for a long day. He had not won in his first six starts of 1994, and was going to be facing the Oakland Athleties.

whom he'd beaten only three times in 15 career decisions. But Finley knew one important thing: Entering their Sunday meeting, the A's were in even worse shape than he was. "I wanted to establish an edge early, because any bad team can

SIDELINES

Jim Finks, NFL Official, Dies at 66

dent and general manager who nearly became National Football League commissioner in 1939, has died of lung cancer. He was 66. Finks, who learned two weeks ago that he had an advanced case of the disease, died Sunday night at his home, said a Saints spokesman. A front office dealmaker for the Bears and Vikings as well as the Sainty, Finks also had success in haseball, helping the Chicago Cubs win the National League East title in 1984—their first division title since 1945.

Five years ago, he was the choice of a six-man selection committee to hecome commissioner of the NFL, a league he had served for 40 years as a Corcoss player, coach and manager. But he was able to get only 18 cf 2i votes from the owners. The job, given up by Pete Rozelle, eventually went to current commissioner Paul Tagliabue, who made Finks chairman of the league's competition committee. Flaks, a heavy smoker, had hattled lung cancer since April 1993. Decreased an advanced case of the disease when he went to the hospital after the NFL draft.

No Senna Replacement in Monaco

LONDON (Reuters) - The Williams team will enter only one car for the Monaco Grand Prix next weekend as a mark of respect to the former world champion Ayrton Senna, who died after crashing in the San Marino Grand Prix on May 1.

In a statement, the team confirmed that Damon Hill would be its only entrant and also said that investigations into the cause of Senna's crash had not revealed any system or component failure.

In a special tribute to Senna and to Roland Ratzenherger, the Austrian who was killed in a practice crash the day before Senna died, the International Automobile Federation will leave the first two positions on the starting grid empty for the Monte Carlo race.

For the Record

Alessio Di Basco of Italy upset the favorites Monday to win the 15th stage of the Tour of Spain between Santo Domingo de la Calzada and Santander, Switzerland's Toni Rominger kept the overall lead. (Reaters) The Dutch soccer star Rund Gullit, 31, on Monday returned to AC

Milan, signing a one-year $1 million contract with the club.

Romania's Hagi Hopes His Time Will Truly Come at '94 World Cup

Special to the Herald Tribune

BRESCIA, Italy - It is a moment that Gheorghe Hagi will never forget, and prohably will never accept, as it plays before his eyes like an incessant television replay. It is the second round of the 1990 World Cup. Regulation play has ended in a 0-0 stalemate. Here, 11 meters from the goal line, is the Romanian midficlder loan Lupescutaking his approach on his team's flith penalty kick. There, in the goal, is Ireland's goalkeeper, Pat Bonner, diving to his left and blocking the shot.

An instinct, an intuition, a lucky wager, and it is over.

After making it through one of the toughest first-round groups of the draw, and after 120 minutes of scoreless quarterfinal play, Romania was out of the tournament.
"It wasn't fair," said Hagi, 29, captain of Romania's soccer team and star of the Italian second division team

"We played better than the Irish did," he added. "We had all the scoring opportunities. Even the Irish players said that we deserved to win. I still have a bitter taste in my mouth from that match."

Like life, sport rarely affords a second chance. And Hagi can't deny already having had several - including a chance to play in the 1994 World Cup, which begins next field. Used to the protective shell that Steams and Romamonth in the United States.

An innately talented wunderkind who made his debut with the Romanian national team at 18 and was named captain at 19, Hagi came to Italia '90 as a 25-year-old of defenders in his wake and a left foot that rivaled Diego Maradona's. Yet Hagi and Romania shumbled against an Irish side that did little more than protect its own goal.

Despite his team's early elimination. Hagi's play was impressive enough to convince Real Madrid to spend $4 million to import him from Steams Bucharest, the Romanian club with which he won three consecutive league

Hagi had long dreamed of playing abroad, and had been courted by many top European clubs. Gianni Ag-nelli, president of Juventus of Turin and of Fiat, allegedly offered to build a car factory in Romania in exchange for the rights to Hagi. But until the 1990 revolution, Romanian players were not allowed to leave the country. So when Hagi, Romania's top soccer star, was signed by

But laymaker-forward with an acceleration that left groups at the end of his first Spanish season. Hagi had scored just defenders in his wake and a left foot that rivaled Diego three goals; in 1989, he had scored 31 with Steaus. "I don't think his stay with Real Madrid was very good

"Gica has a great need for affection and understanding," he added, referring to Hagi by his nickname. "He didn't get it in Madrid."

Hagi's second year at Real was better: He scored 12 goals in league play, and another six in cup competition. But Real again failed to win the league championship, losing the title on the final day of the season when it fell 3-2 to Tenerife after having taken a 2-0 lead on a goal and an reunited with his compatriots Ioan Sabau and Florin Radicioiu. Again, Romania's golden boy failed to shine.

"Like all great talents, Gica has trouble being consistent," said Lucescu. "It is his only defect. I hope he can put it all together for the World Cup. Soccer has need of a great talent to admire, And Gica has all the means to be

After narrowly missing its qualification for the 1992 European Championship, Romania put logether an impressive string of matches in a World Cup qualifying group that also included Belgium, the Czech Republic and Wales, earning a spot in the 1994 finals.

"We have played extremely well for the past two years," said Hagi. "The team has been together for nearly five years. The players all know each other, and how to play logether. The atmosphere is like that of a family.

Considered one of Europe's most talented sides, Romania, like Hagi, has suffered from a lack of consistency in

"We are a Latin people," Hagi said. "We like to play with the ball, to put on a show. We are not concrete, like In 1992, Lucescu convinced Brescia's owner, Luigi the Germans or like the English. We want to play an Corioni, to bring Hagi to Brescia, where he would be exciting soccer. We want to score goals. For this, our matches are fun to watch."

Hagi sees Romania's first-round opponents - Colombia, Switzerland, and the United States — as a difficult and unpredictable group.

"We could win the first round, and we could just as easily finish last," be said. "There are no easy teams. Even the United States, because it is playing at home, and because the United States athlete has a very strong will to win."

Although the 1994 World Cup may be Hagi's last chance to realize his potential, he prefers to concentrate on "Until a few years ago, Romania had an inferiority complex," he said. "We were afraid of our opponents. Not any more. Now we know we can play with anyone. Of course, I have my own ambitions for this World Cup. But it's too early for me to speak of them."

"I'm keeping them to myself," he added, "the way one keeps a precious dream."

its first World Ice Hockey Championship in 33 years on Monday, but its joy could oot hide the fact that players are in the Stanley Cup." the tournament is becoming increasingly devalued as more and more of the best players stay away, In an incredible replay of its loss in the Olympic finals, Canada this time came out on top, beating Finland in a shoot-out to win the title on Sunday.

The game ended in a I-I tie and oeither team scored in overtime. Then came a five-chance shoot-out. Canada led 2-I, when Paul Kaniya missed, with goalie Jarmo Myllys deflecting the puck over the crossbar. His missed shot in a shoot-ont in Lillehammer had given Sweden the Olympic title. Finland scored, Canada didn't, and it was up to Los Angeles Kings forward Luc Robitaille, who put it past Myllys to make it 3-2, Finland's Mika Nieminen then missed. But the victory came in an event that is devalued by being held at the same time as the National Hockey League's Stanley Cup playoffs, depriving it of much topclass talent.

And as top European players continue to sign up with NHL teams, the tournament's prospects become more uncertain.

The standard of many games was low, and the one-sided scores in the latter stages of the tournament were a further sign of deteriorating standards.

The championship relies heavily on the NHL contingent. In all, 65 NHL players took part this year and produced four of the top 10 scorers and the top two goalies.

"If you take the NHL players out of this, you have nothing but another dull European tournament," said Andre Boudrais, chief scout for the Montreal Canadiens.

Wilson and the Canadian coach. George Kingston both favor holding the championship in September, before the NHL season starts. Bot the president of the Interna-

The NHL, on the other hand, is highly unlikely to sanction a 10-day shut-down at the height of its season so that players could take part in the world championship.

Because they are French they are not intimidated by warnings on the outside of eigarette packs that the contents are hazardous to liberté. egalité and fru- 3

The French cigarette indus- Buchwald try is producing record profits because the people are among the great conversationalists of the world. They always keep a cigarette in their mouths so that they will have both hands free to make a The cases of Paris are filled with deadly fumes as both men and women discuss the intellectual topics of the day such as, what role, if any, the Marquis de Sade played in France's office sex abuse problem? What makes the smoking scene unique is the fact that women smoke more than men. I have a friend named Ursula who maintains that she only consumes one pack a week. By chance, she smoked her entire allowance while we had a drink together at the Cafe Deux Magots. Ursula helieved that if the French were not permitted to smoke, they would chew tobacco and then spit it out in their favorite three-star restaurants.

'Cigarettes stimulate the senses and produce great ideas that can only originate from noxious fumes.

U.S. Directors Visit Vietnam The Associated Press

PARIS — The reason the Without oral satisfaction, France French drink so much is to help would be nothing but a poorer version of Portugal," she explained. The French have made some lukewarm efforts to cut down on cigarette pollution. They have instituted smoking and nonsmoking sections in their restaurants.

The sections are divided by the width of a wet noodle, and are so close together that the smokers are constantly asking the nonsmokers

One of the main sources of revenue for the government in France is the tobacco tax. This presents a quandary. If the government cam-paigns for good health, it will lose the revenue needed to take care of those who keep getting sick from

It is not just the taste hut the odor of French tobacco that makes it so appealing. The country manufactures cigarettes that smell like burning automobile tires. Once you develop a taste for them you never want to go back to Lifesavers

Of course, the question that con-stantly comes up is, has smoking in bed increased or decreased since the nicotine scare?

Ursula assured me that it had remained the same. "When both lovers are smokers pillow talk continnes as it has in the past and the couple share the same ashtray. Difficulties arise when one person is a smoker and the other isn't. Some couples are dividing the bedroom into smoking and nonsmoking ar-eas, and after lovemaking they retire to different sections of the room with their backs to each other. The tough cases are where nonsmokers insist that their partners go outside the building and smoke in their night clothes. This is not too romantic or healthy in the winter time."

Health anthorities estimate that at the current rate of cigarette and cigar smoking, France (as a nation) will survive for just 10 more years. That's about the same time as the Russians whose tobacco consumption is greater than any other country in the world.

French smokers don't seem to be concerned. As one friend told me. "If smoking wasn't safe Paris chim-neys wouldn't do it."

Mia Farrow Is Taking the 'High Road'

By Dinitia Smith

EW YORK - Mia Farrow is sitting in her large, dark, paneled apartment on Central Park West. The light shines through her olond curly hair — hair she says she cuts herself. She is nearly 50, with 12 children, 3 cats, 4 birds, a hamster, a gumea pig. She has been up last night with her new adopted daughter. 3-month-old Keili-Shea.

Yet she seems eenly younger than her age. Her skin is luminous, seemingly without makeup — or makeup applied so ex-pertly it is undetectable.

Her family has occupied this apartment since she was 18, when her mother, the actress Maureen O'Sullivan, first rented it. Almost every wall is covered with family photographs: O'Sullivan as Jane in "Tarzan"; her father, John Farrow, who directed "The Big Clock." John Wayne westerns and won an Oscar for his script for "Around the World in 80 Days."

The apartment is so dark that Andre Previn. Farrow's second husband, is said to have once joked: "You have to be careful where you step in Mia's apartment. There might be a baby."

Behind Farrow is the window from which she can see the apartment of her former lover Woody Allen across Central Park. Today, she prefers not to talk about Allen directly. "I have tried to take the high road," she says.

But she has a new moore coming out on Friday, "Widows' Peak," She is being interviewed again, and inevitably questions turn to Allen. For the past two years, the drama of Woody and Mia's oreakup has been played out in newspapers. Woody and Mia were generational icons, a quintessential urban couple, endlessly seif-absorbed, in endless psychotherapy, simultaneously knowing and childlike, seemingly able to take what they wanted from life, when they wanted, how they wanted it.

Then Woody began having an affair with Mia's 19-year-old daughter. Soon-Yi Previn, Woody Allen had reached too far. Then Mia accused Woody of molesting their adopted daughter. Dylan, now 8.

Farrow's new film is her first in 13 years withou; Allen, (Another film, "Miami," written and directed by David Frankel, has not yet been released.)

Set in Ireland in the 1920s. "Widows" Peak" is about a woman who, like Farrow. aopears helpless and fragile — but who has a secret. Joan Plewright plays Mrs. Doyle-Counihan, a wealthy widow who rules the fictional village of Kilshannon with her gossip. Farrow plays Miss O'Hare, a mysterious, impoverished spinster, One day, a glamorous, young widow (Natasha Richardson) arrives in the village. Miss O'Hare takes a dislike to her, And nothing is ever the same.

Mia Farrow with Jim Broadbent in "Widows' Peak" — for the actress the film is a return to her Irish roots.

For Mia Farrow, the film is a return to her Irish roots. Her mother was born in Roscommon, in northwest Ireland, and her aunts still live in Dublin, Farrow's great-grandfather. Daniel O'Sullivan, was Lord Mayor of Cork.

It has been two years since Farrow found photographs of a naked Soon-Yi, taken by Allen, and nearly a year since Elliot Wilk, acting justice of the New York State Supreme Court, denied Ailen custody of his natural son, Satchel (whose name has been changed to Sheamus), 6; his adopted son, Moses, 16, and Dylan, (whose name has been changed to Eliza).

A team of experts from the Yale-New Haven Hospital said they did not believe Allen had molested Dylan. But Wilk faulted the report and called Allen's behavior with Dylan "grossly inappropriate."

"He did not hathe his children." Wilk wrote, "He does not know the names of the children's dentist. He does not know the names of his children's friends. He does not know the names of their many pets." Wilk said that Allen was "self-ab-sorbed, untrustworthy and insensitive." When Farrow is asked to list the names, ages and preoccupations of her children, she readily complies, but Soon-Yi's name conspicuously absent.

Farrow's children come from many backgrounds. The new baby is African-American. Isaiah Justus Farrow, 2, is also African-American. There are Eliza (Dylan). Farrow and Sheamus (Satchel) Farrow. Tam Farrow, a girl, either 12 or 13 — her adoption papers are not clear — is hlind and adopted from Vietnam. Moses Farrow was born with cerebral palsy and adopted from Korea Daisy Previn, 19, and Lark Previn, 21, were adopted from Vietnam.

Farrow's biological sons with Previn are Fletcher, 20, at college in Hamburg, and 24year-old twins, Matthew, who is at George-town University Law School, and Sascha, who works in electronics in Colorado.

Then there is the child Farrow had to give up. In October 1991, she had adopted Sanjay, a Vietnamese child who appeared to be about 6. Farrow thought he had polio but discovered be was profoundly retarded. "It was a very, very difficult thing to do. But given the ages of the other children. how many there are and all the professional advice, we let him go to another family with two parents who were enthusiastic and waiting for such a child."

When Farrow is asked about Soon-Yi Previn, she says: "I still love her. You always love your child."

By the time of Allen's suit for custody of his children was over, Farrow was underdropped from Allen's new film, "Manhat-tan Murder Mystery," having been re-placed by Diane Keaton. Then came the opportunity to film "Widows' Peak."

"There was a sense of putting it all together and going forward," she says. "Making a film in Ireland was so far removed from the courthouse. After allthat had gone on, it seemed a monumental leap, almost surreal: But I have children to support. To my real delight, it was a plea-

For College Graduates. The Alpha and Omega

For those young people who can't quite get a grip on their Generation X. Kust Vonsegut has an alternative: Generation A. "Now you young twerps want a new name for your generation? Probably not you just want jobs, right?" the author asked cheering Syracuse University graduates during his commencement address. I hereby declare you Generation A, as much at the beginning of a series of as-tonishing triumphs and failures as Adam and Eve were so long ago. And so it goes, generation after generation.

Bobcat Goldthwalt was on the prowl again, and Jay Leno was not amused. A week after Goldthwaii spray-painted the set of Arsenio Hall's late-night TV talk show, the comedian sprayed his chair with lighter fluid and set fire to it on the set of "The Tonight Show With Jay Leno." "It's really no big thing." a perturbed Leno said afterward. "except when you have fire and 550 records in the audience and a set people in the audience and a set that's made out of paper and balsa wood."

Donna Rice, the femme fatale of the 1987 Gary Hart political debacle, has entered a new chapter of her life — marriage. Rice wed Jack Hinghes of Washington in Missis sippi, the Natchez Democrat reported. Details were kept secret.

The directors Steven Spielberg and George Lucas and the singer Ella Fazgerald received honorary doctorates from the University of Southern California. "I guess this means that after 25 years I'm finally out of college," said Spielberg, a university dropout.
